Subject: Thank you - The New York Times

Date: Monday, March 07, 2011 10:01:04 AM

Dear Faculty & Administration,

Thank you for attending The New York Times faculty workshop on February 22nd. It was a pleasure meeting with you and visiting the University of San Diego campus. I hope you found the presentation valuable. A special word of thanks to Dr. Sgoutas-Emch, Amanda Ryan & the Center for Educational Excellence for their help in organizing the event.

Below is some information on how to make The New York Times part of your course and take advantage of all that The Times has to offer you and your students.

Visit our InCollege website for instructional strategies, general methodologies, essays, and videos of faculty sharing their experience using The Times in the classroom, at: nvtimes.com/edu.

Also, we touched upon the serendipitous experience of reading the print edition of a newspaper. There is an interesting essay titled "Serendipity" by Dr. William McKeen, which is posted on our college Web site. Link here to "Serendipity."

Here also is a link to Times Topics, our digital index of over 25,000 topics pages, which include news articles, reference, archival information, photos, graphics, audio & video files.

To receive your complimentary Monday - Friday subscription:

Just send me a copy of your syllabus including The Times, along with your delivery address and phone number. Faculty who require The New York Times print edition as part of a course can receive their own complimentary, home-delivered copy Monday through Friday for the duration of the course.

Thank you again for your support of The New York Times. Please feel free to reach out to me directly for any additional materials, such as information on home delivery, materials for introducing students to the newspaper and New York Times items we can provide for building excitement around integration of the newspaper in your course.

Best regards,

Leigh Anna Moore-Jones
