Opportunity – Kroc Institute for Peace and Justice Seeks Research Assistant.

The Kroc IPJ is seeking a research assistant for a three-month period for a project focused on political violence in the United States. The research assistant will support work designed to assess the costs of political violence in the United States and identify evidence-based strategy to prevent political violence. Our working definition of political violence is: \textit{violence aimed at political ends} – that is, \textit{violence meant to control or change who benefits from, and/or participates fully in, U.S. political, economic, and socio-cultural life.}” The work will inform a variety of organizations and agencies seeking to address this challenge.

Qualified candidates will:

- Have experience researching various forms of violence within the United States.
- Have experience producing applied research for a variety of audiences, including policymakers, practitioners, and funders.
- Have the capability to quickly synthesize large amounts of academic and non-academic research.
- Have the capability to interpret, synthesize, and create visualizations of both quantitative and qualitative data.

When
April 15-July 15, 2020. 20-25 hours per week.

Where
Research can be conducted from anywhere within the United States. Candidates must have access to a high-quality academic library.

Salary
Remuneration will be determined based on the experience and expertise of the candidate.

Contact:
For more information on the position and for further information on how to apply, please contact Andrew Blum, Executive Director, Kroc IPJ, andrewblum@sandiego.edu